November 2019

From Our Director, Jody Cole

We thought that September flew by, and I think we somehow believed that October would be a bit more leisurely....Somehow here we are at November. We had unseasonably warm weather in October, and you can see from the photos that the children had fun outdoors as well as indoors. Adults, too, lingered on the bridge as they came in and looked at the leaves and the ducks and the water.

Pretty soon, though, people will be walking quickly and wanting to come inside to our warm and cozy library. We’re waiting for you and happy to see you. This month, as the holidays approach, we’ll have a program on finances, something that is on everyone’s mind as the shopping season begins. Come in to see how to manage your money and start off the new year in good financial shape. We’re especially happy to have the Friends here this month to host a “Note-able Tea.” We didn’t have one last year, and it was missed by many folks. The sweets and savories are always some of the best to be had here in Shippensburg. And the harp music is relaxing and fun.

Thanksgiving comes right after the tea, and please note that we will close early at 2 p.m. the day before and will not reopen until the day after.

We hope to see you soon! Happy Thanksgiving everyone! We are thankful for all of you in this community.

November Authors

Stephen Crane (November 1, 1871) Born in New Jersey to a suffragist mother and a minister father, Crane was the youngest of 14 children. As a young man, Crane moved to New York where he gained firsthand knowledge of life, street life and life among the poor. While there, he wrote for the New York Tribune. His experiences became the backdrop for his novel, Maggie. Self-published, this story was not well received at the time. As a newspaperman, Crane became a war correspondent bound for Cuba in 1887. The ship sank, and Crane and three other men were adrift for a day. He used this experience as the basis for "The Open Boat." The Red Badge of Courage, published in 1895, is probably his best known novel. A realistic account of human emotion in war was very well received. Ironically, Crane was never in the military himself. While living in England, Crane wrote other novels in an attempt to support his elaborate lifestyle and suffered worsening health. He died of tuberculosis at 28 years of age.

Robert Louis Stevenson (November 13, 1850) His father designed lighthouses and expected his son to join the family business. Stevenson went to Edinburgh University to study engineering but found it unappealing. Instead he studied law and finished law school in 1875. He never actually practiced law, wanting instead to be a writer. His summer travel became the influence for his stories. His first book was about a canoe trip through Europe. Later short stories were the start of his adventure fiction. His future wife, American Fanny Osbourne, and he were married in 1880. They traveled to California, Stevenson suffering from ill health, possibly tuberculosis. While bedridden, he wrote extensively, including Treasure Island in 1883, Kidnapped in 1886, and Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde in 1886. Treasure Island was inspired after Stevenson drew a map for his stepson. In 1888, he journeyed to the South Pacific islands and died in 1894 in Samoa.

C.S. Lewis (November 29, 1898) Born in Ireland, Lewis showed an early interest in fantasy and imagination. He and his brother created an imaginary land with a complex history. During WWI, Lewis joined the British Army but was wounded by shrapnel and was sent home. He then attended Oxford and taught there after graduation. Earlier he had abandoned his Christian beliefs but after conversations with friends, including J.R.R.Tolkien, he renewed his belief in Christianity. In the 1920's, he began publishing books and in 1938, released his first sci-fi work, Out of the Silent Planet. During WWII, Lewis gave radio broadcasts on Christianity that won many converts. In the 1950's he published The Chronicles of Narnia that contained fantasy with Biblical themes. In 1954, he began a teaching career at Cambridge, and in 1956 he married an American English teacher named Joy Gresham. They lived happily until her death in 1960. He resigned from Cambridge in 1963 and died shortly thereafter from heart problems.
